Behold the Manby Michael Moorcock is a brilliantly conceived SF novella that fascinated me when I first read it in I now find it to be a difficult read I am a less patient and forgiving reader these daysbut the core concept of the book is so compelling that I still recommend it. For example, injury to the cord at mid-thoracic levels spares the arms, which are innervated by fibres originating from higher segments, but it causes characteristic signs abnormal posture, spastic tone, weakness, increased deep reflexes, and abnormal plantar reflexes of damage to motor neurons originating below that level-as well as the loss of bladder and bowel control.
